Ty isn't like the rest of his peers: he seldom parties or plays sports, usually spending his time hanging out with his crazy best friend, Michael. One would describe Ty as having an "old soul". But then, partly because of his own actions, a tragic event happens to Ty, causing him to become bitter and loathe the society that he lives in until he meets the stunning "it-girl" of the class, Bridget. When Jessie, Bridget's jealous, gang-affiliated ex-boyfriend, warns Ty to stay away from his ex-girlfriend or there would be dangerous consequences, Ty is already in love and decides to pursue her anyway. Now Ty gets caught in a web of punishment, revenge, and self-actualization as he tries to find the right road in life. Ty's life becomes one of missed opportunities and tragic consequences. He learns that though tragedies may not be commonplace, they are not infrequent either. Failures, like successes, are part of life— in fact, they are the very essence of what defines a life. Those with the highest achievements and greatest joys are those who have learned to accept their burdens and overcome their obstacles, that failures form the foundation for future successes, and that the lowest of lows are often followed by the highest of highs. Through a resiliency uncommon in many of his age, Ty learns why life works the way it does, who he is meant to be, and that life is truly what you make it.
