Beautiful ocean views, long breathtaking train rides, and gorgeous foreign men... this is what Aliena is exposed to when she goes to the south of France for her mother's wedding to a rich and good-looking Frenchman. What could be better, right? Just about anything, as far as Aliena is concerned. Despite knowing there will be good food, wine, and dancing, Aliena is not looking forward to her trip across the pond. All of her worst fears about traveling are confirmed when she accidentally crashes into a sexy, rude stranger while running along the beach.

She can't deny her attraction for the man, despite the fact that he's a grade-A asshole, but then she discovers his true identity: her mother's soon-to-be husband's son. She tries to avoid him, because now that they are going to be siblings he is not only a jerk, but also completely off-limits. Though he shares her view that they share a special attraction, he can't seem to get it through his head that they shouldn't have a little bit of fun. Aliena can't decide what to do: should she give in to her desire or spurn her stepbrother's advances?
